PRE-SEASON RAVE

2011

CHAMPION/DATA/ISSUE 1

The wait is over! Hi and welcome to the first edition of the Fantasy Freako's pre-season rave for 2011. This year promises to be like no other, with the addition of a 17th AFL side making the competition as unpredictable as ever. With bigger squad sizes, two more rounds and bye(s) thrown into the mix, it will be more about strategy than anything this year. Enjoy this week's read and as an added bonus in 2011, you can follow me on twitter. Get exclusive AFL Dream Team information from the NAB challenge games live and post game.

Also lookout for Freako's radar where each week I will highlight which players I am keeping a close eye on. These can easily be identified by a radar symbol next to their name. Take note also, Round 1 scores have not been included due to the revised NAB Cup format.

BENCH WILL BE CRITICAL IN 2011

The importance of nailing your bench this year cannot be underestimated. Unlike previous years when we only used emergencies in case of injury or a late change, in 2011 they will be active for us most weeks. The introduction of bye(s) may cause mayhem for some, but remember that there will be no head-to-head league games during the multi-team round byes in Rounds 4, 5, 6, 16 and 19.

There are a plethora of bench options this year, with the Gold Coast Suns providing us with some great buys in every position. Youngster Alik Magin has been a standout so far, but he's currently on the rookie list and unless he gets upgraded anytime soon, he won't be eligible to play in Round 1. Nick Lower has been the pick of the bunch so far, but he too is rookie listed. Of the players that can be selected, mature-age recruit Nicholas Duigan has had an immediate impact in the Blues defence. He looks to have cemented a place in the line up for Round 1 with some solid form in his three games. He racked up a lazy 93 points last week against GWS, but we can't read too much into that. Other player's that have caught the eye are young Docker Viv Michie and Saints third-year player Alistair Smith.

DISPOSALS PER MINUTE

When picking your premiums, you have to consider the below listed players. These guys were the most productive based on their time on ground last season, and it's no surprise who heads the list. Dane Swan ranked No.1 in the AFL for disposals per minute, with team mate Scott Pendlebury not too far behind in fourth. Saints duo Lenny Hayes and Leigh Montagna occupied the second and third rankings.

Below are the top-10 performers for disposals per minute in 2010.

ADELAIDE

CHRIS KNIGHTS

Knights is as cheap as chips this year, after averaging 66 points per game from his five matches in 2010. There are plenty of coaches that have pencilled him in for Round 1, but after his first match for the year last week against Fremantle, you may have to think again. He suffered an injury scare and finished the match on the bench. Not good news if you ask me. Durability has been his biggest concern, playing more than 20 games only once across his career.

IAN CALLINAN

I doubt that he'll be a Podsiadly, but at 28 years of age he fits the criteria. If elevated onto the senior list before Round 1, Callinan could be a surprise selection for the Crows season opener against the Hawks. At the basement rookie price, there is also tremendous upside to him as a Dual Position Player. He was lively last week against Fremantle with 58 points courtesy of his 15 disposals and one goal.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Brodie Martin is one player to consider. This kid is a ball-magnet in the making!

BRISBANE LIONS

CLAYE BEAMS

He has the Beams name but only time will tell if he's anywhere near as good as his brother. He's been elevated to the senior list this year which suggests that Voss has every intention of playing him. The Lions have plenty of positions to fill in the midfield and at the basement price he's a bargain. He hasn't set the world on fire so far this pre-season, but make sure you keep him in the back of your mind nonetheless.

JOSH DRUMMOND

The fact that Drummond is already on the Lions injury list should be of no surprise to anyone. He has been hampered by a hip injury and will miss at least the next three weeks, which means that he could go into Round 1 without any match practise. That's a recipe for disaster considering what his injury history is like. Despite his tempting price, avoid him and save yourself a trade.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - It looks like being a long year for the Lions. Besides youngster Jared Polec, there is very little to get excited about.

CARLTON

BRYCE GIBBS

Gibbs will surely be one of the most selected players this season due to his dual position status. A return to the midfield is on the cards after he spent much of last year deep in defence. He was one of several Blues that dominated last week against GWS, finishing with 24 disposals and 93 points. Gibbs has been a star across the past three seasons, averaging an impressive 97 points per match in that period.

JEREMY LAIDLER

I would be staggered if Laidler didn't play in Round 1. He was starved of opportunities at Geelong, but as soon as the Blues picked him up his stocks rose. He will definitely have an impact this season and at $177,300 he could be a good buy as a fifth or sixth defender. He didn't dominate against GWS last week, but he was still solid nonetheless with 10 disposals, six marks and 55 points.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - I wouldn't take too much notice of Carlton's scores last week. Even I could have had 20 disposals against GWS.

COLLINGWOOD

ALAN DIDAK

We're yet to see Didak this pre-season, and I strongly doubt that the Magpies will play him in Perth this week. The lively forward has had an injury interrupted pre-season after undergoing shoulder surgery after the Grand Final, and he may be a little underdone going into Round 1. Take all of that into account before picking him in your side, as there is every chance that he may suffer an early price drop, especially if Mick uses him as an impact player as a substitute in the early rounds.

LEON DAVIS

After averaging career-high 99 points per match in 2009, Davis got nowhere near that last season, averaging 64 points per game. His time in the midfield dried up and so did his scores, scoring over 80 points just four times. He lined up in defence last week against the Swans, and based on his performance, it could become a permanent role now that Krakouer is in the side. Monitor where he plays in the coming weeks before making a call.

ESSENDON

DYSON HEPPELL

Almost every man and his dog will have Heppell is their side this year, and why not? His first up performances in the NAB Cup so far have been eye-catching, finishing with 15 disposals, three tackles, two goals and 63 points last week against Melbourne. He was a ball-magnet at TAC Cup level, averaging 109 points per match and ranking No.1 in the competition for kicks and third for disposals. He is almost certain to debut in Round 1 against the Bulldogs. Jump on!

DAVID MYERS

There is definitely a spot for Myers in Essendon's defence this season, with the only query being his form and durability. The former No.6 draft pick could only manage eight games last year, but he showed plenty, averaging 64 points per outing. His performance in Round 22 would have delighted Bombers fans, finishing with 29 disposals, seven marks and 109 points. He was sharp last week against Melbourne collecting 18 disposals and 58 points.

@FantasyFreako - Michael Hurley looks like being settled as a forward this year. There's plenty of upside to him at that price, especially if you pick him as a defender.

FREMANTLE

TENDAI MZUNGU

If you don't have Mzungu in your team, then do yourself a favour and bring him in. He's been a star for the Dockers so far this pre-season, dominating in both matches in Round 1 of the NAB Cup. He finished the game off strongly last week against Adelaide, collecting nine of his 22 disposals in the final term to finish with 77 points for the match. His dual position status is an added bonus and at $97,600 you can't go wrong.

MICHAEL JOHNSON

The arrival of ruckman Griffin will see Johnson settle into one position this year, more than likely in defence. He lined up there last week in the NAB Challenge clash against Adelaide and finished with a team-high 28 disposals and 109 points. He hasn't been an elite Dream Teamer to date, averaging no more than 75 points per match in any season, but I can see him topping that this year. Strongly consider.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Don't be too alarmed with the output of Aaron Sandilands and Matthew Pavlich so far. Mark Harvey is keeping his two prized assets in cotton wool.

GEELONG CATS

PAUL CHAPMAN

There have been whispers around that Chapman may be carrying a calf injury, which is why we haven't seen him yet this pre-season. I doubt that the Cats would confirm or deny this either way, but if we don't see him play over the next two weeks, the question has to be asked. He was a star in 2010, averaging a career-high 28 disposals and 114 points per game. Chapman is the most expensive forward in the competition this year at $472,200.

MITCH DUNCAN

There is a lot of Corey in the way that Duncan goes about his game. He runs hard, tackles strongly and picks up plenty of touches along the way. He played in the guts last week against the Saints and dominated scoring a game-high 112 points. Admittedly the Cats were missing several key midfielders, but the performance was of highest quality nonetheless. Despite his high starting price, I wouldn't hesitate in picking him.

Freko Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Steve Johnson looks set for a big year. He's been identified as the replacement for Gary Ablett in the midfield which means that there are some huge scores on the horizon.

GOLD COAST SUNS

DANIEL HARRIS

Harris sat out last week's match against West Coast. Despite not playing, at $114,400 you would be crazy not to start with him in your team. He top scored for the Suns in their clash against the Swans and was just as good against GWS. As we all know he was a tackling machine at North Melbourne, ranking 12th in the AFL for average tackles between 2006-09.

BRANDON MATERA

At 61kg there may not be much of Matera by looking at his light frame, but the kid can play. His 72 points were the equal-most of any Gold Coast player last week against West Coast, finishing with 14 disposals, four marks and one goal. He played all but one game in the VFL last season and led the Suns for goals with 23. Although he may not end up being a keeper, at the bargain price of $97,600 he will make you plenty of money.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Word is that we won't see Gazza play a competitive game until the season opener in Round 2. Avoid picking him in your initial squad.

HAWTHORN

CAMERON BRUCE

Bruce has been an elite Dream Teamer since 2006, averaging at least 90 points per match in that time. He played his first game for the Hawks last week against the Kangaroos and looked right at home, finishing with 19 disposals, six tackles and 89 points. If you want him in your team he can only be selected as a defender, which is a bonus really, considering that he'll spent most of his time in the midfield.

KYLE CHENEY

Cheney was identified as the replacement for the outgoing Brown and subsequently the Hawks snapped him up during the trade period. He was solid last week against North Melbourne in the NAB Challenge, finishing with 17 disposals and 58 points. He may be competing with fellow recruit Paul Puopolo for that back-pocket position, so keep an eye on both players form as we approach Round 1.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Cyril Rioli has spent the pre-season playing off the half-back flank. Lets hope it's not a permanent move, we want him in the guts.

MELBOURNE

JACK GRIMES

Grimes has been a star for Melbourne so far this pre-season. He was the only Demon that collected more than 20 disposals last week against Essendon, finishing with 25 disposals, five marks, three tackles and a team-high 90 points. The Demons like getting the ball into his hands and don't forget the freebies he gets from the kick-ins. He plays the sweeping role magnificently and should be considered for a starting berth.

JACK TRENGOVE

All the talk has been about former No.1 pick Scully this pre-season, but it's Trengove that's produced the goods. He was the Demons most productive player behind Jack Grimes last week against Essendon, finishing with 19 disposals and 85 points. He's going to be a star of the competition, but in saying that, I wouldn't be selecting him in my starting squad. At $316,100 I would look at finding some extra cash and turning him into a premium instead.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Robert Campbell is still up to six weeks away with an achillies injury. I doubt that we will see him in the early rounds.

NORTH MELBOURNE

DREW PETRIE

There's no doubting Petrie is way under the odds this season. His 2010 was ruined by two separate broken legs which restricted him to a career-low two games. An on-field indiscretion will now see him miss Round 1 through suspension, and coupled with a Round 3 bye, you will be forced to cover him for two of the first three rounds. His price won't change until after Round 5, leaving you with plenty to think about if you currently have him in your team.

CAMERON RICHARDSON

Richardson has been a real positive for North Melbourne this pre-season. Although he can only be selected as a forward, he'll spend much of the year playing across half-back and through the midfield. He top scored for the Kangaroos in both Round 1 matches and was solid last week against Hawthorn, finishing with 20 touches and 64 points. At $97,600 he is sure to be selected by plenty of coaches.

PORT ADELAIDE

KANE CORNES

This guy is one of my all-time favourites. Although he may not belt out massive scores like a Swan, he's one of the most consistent going around. He ranked 12th for points scored last season averaging 101 per match – which included scoring at least 87 points in all but four games. He has averaged at least 95 points per match in each year since 2005 and hasn't missed a game since 2003. What a star!

JASPER PITTARD

Pittard looks to be a great cash cow this season. He was on the verge of making his AFL debut late in 2010, but he didn't get across the line. He is one of several Port Adelaide youngsters that will get games this season and possibly as soon as Round 1. He could only manage 34 points in the NAB Challenge last week against Richmond, but it was only a pre-season game. Keep him in mind.

TOM DERICKX

In years gone by, we would pick our two starting ruckman and then just fill the bench with two duds. Not in 2011. This year we need our ruckman to be playing on a regular basis, as they will be called upon to cover bye(s). Mature-age recruit Derickx should come into calculations, with the Tigers ruck stocks in desperate need of some grunt. He's impressed with his endeavour in his three matches to date, although he only scored 20 points last week against Port Adelaide.

BACHAR HOULI

The Tigers got their man in Houli. He showed us last week that he will be a great pickup for any coach this season, starting on his Richmond debut against Port Adelaide in the NAB Challenge with 17 disposals and 92 points – the third-most of any Richmond player. The Tigers will give the ball to him at every opportunity and he'll rack up some huge scores for you this year.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Brett Deledio as a DPP is a huge bonus this year. Make him a priority for your defence or midfield.

ST KILDA

BEN McEVOY

If you're after a unique pick as your second ruckman, then McEvoy could be worth a punt. Entering his fourth season, he should step up and become the Saints No.1 ruckman, as Gardiner is still recovering from injury. He averaged 58 points per match last season and he should eclipse that this year, given he gets more game time. He impressed last week with 13 disposals, 13 hitouts and 70 points against Geelong.

SAM GILBERT

One thing is for sure, Ross Lyon sticks to his guns. He suggested during the summer that Gilbert may play in attack this year and that's where he lined up in his first match for 2011 against the Cats. He played 68% of the game and finished with only seven touches, clearly not enough for a player priced at $387,100. Until he returns to defence, stay well clear of him.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Nick Riewoldt under $400k is a bargain if you ask me. He is clearly the best key forward in the competition.

SYDNEY SWANS

ANDREJS EVERITT

The Swans track record with recycled players is exceptional. All three recruits last year had career-best seasons, with two of them finishing in the top-three of the clubs' B&F award. Everitt is the big recruit this year and if his performances to date are anything to go by, we can add his name to the success list. He mopped up everything last week against the Magpies and finished with 16 disposals, five marks and 70 points.

NICK MALCESKI

Malceski was one of the bargain buys of last season, however some coaches may be put off this year by his starting price. He's one of the better defenders in the AFL, despite him having a couple of lean years in 2008-09. He was back to his best last season, collecting the fourth-most points at Sydney which included clocking up 100 or points in seven games. He was the Swans leading disposal-winner and ranked third for marks. He's looked good so far this pre-season and has to be considered.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Very little will change with the Swans this season. Defence will once again be the key component of their game plan.

WEST COAST EAGLES

DEAN COX

The biggest story to come out of the pre-season so far is the return to form of the once Dream Team king. Cox has turned it on in the opening two rounds and although some may question the opposition, it's the manner he's gone about it that's impressed. He scored a game-high 99 points last week against the Suns, finishing with 16 disposals, seven marks and two goals. The new interchange rule will also help his cause, as he's likely to rest in attack instead of coming off the ground.

ANDREW GAFF

It's no surprise that Gaff will wear Chris Judd's No.3 this season because this kid is all class. He started as a substitute against the Suns last week and played 32 minutes in the second half, showing glimpses his talents. He kicked a nice goal in the final quarter and finished with 32 points. He was a star at Under-18 level last season, averaging 114 points per game in the TAC Cup and although he won't reach those heights this season, he'll still be a great pick up.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Jack Darling is surely in the mix for a Round 1 debut. He looked quite at home in the Eagles forward line last week with 14 touches and four tackles.

WESTERN BULLDOGS

SHAUN HIGGINS

I know he burned plenty of us last season, but Higgins looks to be in sparkling touch. From all reports he's over the injuries that held him back and he looks set for a big year. He finished with 18 disposals, four marks, two goals and 81 points last week against the Lions. He has dual position status again this year, which will help us in covering injuries/bye(s) during the year.

MATTHEW BOYD

If you don't want to pay top dollar for Swan, then you can build your midfield around Boyd. He is a Dream Team jet and the Etihad Stadium specialist, averaging 123 points per match at the venue in 2010. Considering the Bulldogs play 13 games there this season, he's hard to pass up. Boyd averaged the third-most points of any player last season behind Swan and Ablett.
