

FANTASY FREAKO'S

2012 PRE-SEASON RAVE

CHAMPION/DATA/ISSUE 3

Hi and welcome to the third edition of the Fantasy Freako's pre-season rave. With only one more week of NAB Cup games to come, there are still plenty of unknowns as we look at finalising our squads, with the biggest of those the rookies. Injuries hit hard last week, with both James Magner and Lachie Neale going down, while there were several others that didn't even get a game, such as Sam Darley and Steven Morris. With squad sizes reduced back to the conventional 22 this week, it's vital that you monitor the final teams, as this gives us the clearest indication of who will be in the mix for a Round 1 start.

Enjoy this week's read and don't forget to follow me on twitter. Get exclusive AFL Dream Team information from the NAB Cup/Challenge games live and post match.

MID-PRICED GEMS

As was outlined in the '2012 AFL Prospectus', the mid-priced strategy was on the way out, and the guns-rookies approach was now the way to go. In saying that though, there will always be room for a mid-pricer, especially if you pick the right player. This year there is a decent group to choose from, with the likes of Hamish McIntosh, Chris Masten and Hayden Ballantyne all players that have been spoken about glowingly this pre-season.

Of that trio, Chris Masten looks to be the one to jump on early after his scintillating early season form. A perennial underachiever, this looks to be his year. He ranks second in the competition for DT points scored across the pre-season behind Jack Redden, scoring 89 and 96 in his two full outings. He finished with 19 disposals against the Saints in his most recent match, but he scored almost half of his points from tackles alone, applying 10.

Below I have identified a group of mid-pricers that should be considered for your starting squad, with the likes of John McCarthy and Ivan Maric presenting great value at their second AFL club.

PLAYER MANAGEMENT

The term 'player management' was one fantasy coaches heard far too often last season. Chris Scott and Geelong led that charge, with the Cats the only side in the AFL not to have anyone play in all 22 H&A matches. Sadly from a fantasy perspective this was seen as a masterstroke by the rookie coach, and several other coaches have since signalled their intentions to do likewise.

Brett Ratten has already got on the front foot and declared that Carlton was likely to rest its stars also, with Chris Judd and Marc Murphy two prime candidates to miss games. Several other big names, headed by Dean Cox and Nick Riewoldt are also expected to be rested during the year. Below I have identified which players with fantasy relevance could be rested this season based on comments already made by key figures.

POSSIBLY RESTED?

Club	Players
Carlton	C. Judd, M. Murphy, B. Gibbs
Fremantle	A. Sandilands
Geelong Cats	J. Bartel, C. Enright, P. Chapman, J. Selwood
Greater Western Sydney	D. Brogan, L. Power, J. McDonald
Hawthorn	L. Franklin, L. Hodge, C. Rioli, S. Mitchell
St Kilda	N. Riewoldt, S. Fisher, L. Montagna, L. Hayes
West Coast Eagles	D. Cox

ADELAIDE

JASON PORPLYZIA

Porplyzia is making it very difficult not to pick him. I put a line through him a few weeks ago, but he's doing his best to force his way back into my side. He starred last week against the Magpies with four goals straight and 84 DT points, finishing with 13 disposals, six marks and three tackles. If he has another solid hitout against West Coast, I'll have no choice but to reinstate him.

NATHAN VAN BERLO

van Berlo finished last season off in blazing fashion, and he looks to have taken that form into 2012. From Round 19 onwards last year only Dane Swan scored more DT points in the league, averaging 122 points per game. He's definitely a unique option for your midfield if you are looking to be a little different.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - The Crows will play the Suns, Giants and the Power in the first five rounds. Plenty of points up for grabs there!

BRISBANE LIONS

PEARCE HANLEY

Hanley had a breakout season last year as a defender, ranking fifth at the Lions for DT points scored, averaging 80 per match. He reached that mark in 10 of his 22 games, which included four huge scores over 100 – with a season-high 129 coming against Geelong in Round 17. He should maintain these numbers from last season, if not exceed them.

MITCHELL GOLBY

Golby has been a surprise packet for Brisbane, ranking third at the club for DT points scored behind Jack Redden and Tom Rockliff during the NAB Cup. With a lot of coaches opting for Brian Lake or Ryan Hargrave as mid-pricers in defence, he could be worth a punt if you're after someone unique.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Simon Black just gets better with age. His 126 DT points last week against the Blues was the second-highest score for the round.

CARLTON

SAM ROWE

I'm sure plenty of coaches would have started with Rowe in their side, but after his performances so far, all would have given him the boot. He has been a massive disappointment so far, but being a key-position player it's no real surprise. He played a full match last week against Brisbane, finishing with a dismal seven disposals and 24 DT points.

JORDAN RUSSELL

After a career-best season in 2010, Russell found himself on the outer last year. He played no part in Carlton's finals campaign and managed only match after Round 16 which came in the final round of the H&A season. In his first full match of the pre-season last week against the Lions, he looked impressive across half-back, finishing with 17 disposals and 71 DT points. Worth a look if you ask me.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Carlton was kept scoreless in the third term last week by Brisbane, failing to generate a single forward 50 entry.

COLLINGWOOD

STEELE SIDEBOTTOM

I expect Sidebottom to take his game to another level this year. He's been a solid scorer across his career so far, averaging 80 DT points per match, but I think he's capable of hitting the 90 mark this year. He's likely to spend more time in the midfield this season and his DPP status makes picking him that much easier. He top scored for the Magpies last week against the Crows, finishing with 21 disposals and 87 points.

TRAVIS CLOKE

As I mentioned in the first rave of the pre-season, Cloke is the only other key-forward I would consider besides Lance Franklin. He monstred his opponents last season, ranking equal-first in the AFL for marks and No. 1 for contested marks, while also booting the equal second-most goals behind Buddy. Even if he does have an off day in front of goal, he'll make up for that with the amount of ball he attracts. Strongly consider him.

@FantasyFreako - It's not that often that the Magpies cop a 77 point belting, even if it is just the NAB Cup. Worrying signs for Bucks?

ESSENDON

COURTENAY DEMPSEY

Dempsey demonstrated last week that he has fully recovered from the serious knee injury that ended his 2011 campaign. He moved with plenty of freedom, finishing with 17 disposals and 54 DT points and based on his discounted price, he's worth monitoring this week. In his last full season in 2010, he was a solid performer averaging a career-high 18 disposals and 72 points per match.

JOBE WATSON

Prior to getting injured in Round 8 last season, Watson was the form player of the competition, ranking No.1 for DT points scored, racking up 65 more than his closest rival Marc Murphy. He struggled with injury for the remainder of the year, and based on that he's well underpriced going into 2012. Coming off a career-high average of 99 points, he's a steal!

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - With no David Hille last week against Sydney, Patrick Ryder reminded us just how dominant he can be as a ruckman/forward.

FREMANTLE

LACHIE NEALE

Neale injured his ankle midway through the third term last week and is now in serious doubt for Round 1. The club expects him to miss 2-3 weeks, but does that mean we jump ship and replace him? Even with so much love for him from Ross Lyon, it's hard to commit to someone who's injured and unproven from a DT perspective. Hopefully we don't see him until at least Round 5-6.

MATTHEW PAVLICH

After playing predominantly as a midfielder last season, we may see Pavlich revert back to his customary role in attack this year. He was one of Fremantle's best last week against the Power, finishing with 103 DT points – the second-most of any player on the ground behind team mate Nathan Fyfe. He's rarely let me down, missing only nine games across the past decade, averaging 92 points per match.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Nathan Fyfe says that he hasn't reached peak fitness yet. Watch out when he does!

GEELONG CATS

ORREN STEPHENSON

Stephenson has been far from convincing this NAB Cup, and despite being a mature-age player at the low price, I'm strongly considering giving him the chop. He's been sparingly used so far, managing only five disposals and 25 DT points from half a game last week against the Tigers. With Jonathan Giles and Jarrad Redden in decent form, they've now become the preferred ruck bench duo.

TOM GILLIES

Gillies was always going to be given an opportunity this year, but he's way too defensive to be considered in DT, even at his low price. He could only manage seven disposals and 20 points last week against Richmond despite playing 95% of the game, which says it all. Look elsewhere for a cash cow in your defence.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Geelong finished with 127 fewer disposals, 44 fewer marks and 15 fewer inside 50s than Richmond last week in what was a dismal display.

GOLD COAST SUNS

JOSH CADDY

I know he's only played half a game and it was against the Giants, but it's hard not to get excited about Caddy. This kid will be a DT jet in no time, but his starting price this season is somewhat of a deterrent. He collected eight disposals and 60 points in the second half last week – the most of any Gold Coast player and the fourth-most of any player for the half.

AARON HALL

All eyes will be on the Gold Coast line up this week to see if Hall finally returns. After starring in the opening round of the NAB Cup, he's missed the past two matches with a hamstring complaint. His fitness is paramount given that he's one of very few rookie forwards that look like scoring well enough to start on the ground.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - From all reports Jared Brennan will be used in a roaming role in defence this year. He knows how to find the ball and could be a unique option for your side.

GREATER WESTERN SYDNEY

ANTHONY MILES

The focus has been on Dylan Shiel for some time now, but that will surely change now that Miles has fired. He dominated last week against the Suns, finishing with 24 disposals, seven marks, one goal and 99 DT points – the third-most on the ground. He was a prolific scorer in the NEAFL last season, averaging the most points of any Giants player (103 per game).

JAMES MCDONALD

I know most coaches have already McDonald pencilled into their side, but I'm starting to wonder if he will provide as much value as we expect him to. For starters he'll be a prime candidate for the red vest, so that clearly affects his money making potential. Opting to go for fellow mature-ager Stephen Clifton may be the way to go, even though he costs us more.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Chad Cornes wound back the clock last week against the Suns, playing that loose role in defence. Any takers?

HAWTHORN

LUKE HODGE

I would have been one of thousands of coaches that jumped off Hodge last year after he lost his DPP status. He ended up having a solid year in the end, averaging 24 disposals and 94 DT points per match, only slightly down on his 2010 average. I expect him to reproduce those numbers this year if not exceed them, so keep him on your radar.

JORDAN LEWIS

Lewis is one of several midfielders from 2011 that have been awarded DPP status this year, making him a prime target for the forward line. He ranked seventh at the club for both disposals and DT points scored last season, cracking the ton in nine games, scoring 120 plus four times. Lewis is called upon to perform a defensive job at time though, so keep this in mind before committing.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - The long-term injury to Max Bailey could see ex-Lion Broc McCauley get his chance. He's been named this week so keep an eye on him.

MELBOURNE

JAMES MAGNER

There was genuine concern last week when Magner went off injured early in the first quarter. As it turns out he only suffered a dislocated finger, so he should be right to go in the season opener given he gets promoted to the senior list. He hasn't been named to face Port Adelaide this week though, which could be a blow to his Round 1 chances.

MITCHELL CLARK

There's one thing for sure, Clark will lead Melbourne for goals this season. He looks to be the only player capable of taking a grab and kicking a goal, but does that equate into DT selection? Clark played is best football as a ruckman in 2009, averaging 94 DT points per game, but sadly we won't see him in that role at the Demons, which basically rules him out.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - The Demons rank in the bottom three this pre-season for average disposals, uncontested possessions, marks and goals. Worrying sings from a DT perspective.

NORTH MELBOURNE

LIAM ANTHONY

Anthony looks to have taken over from Brady Rawlings in that sweeping role across half-back. This means that there will be plenty of cheap disposals up for grabs, and as a mid-priced midfielder he's worth having a look at. He's a proven ball-winner, ranking in the top-three at the club in disposals per minute in each of his three seasons so far.

BRENT HARVEY

Harvey proved last week that age was no barrier, racking up 53 DT points in half a match. He started the game as the substitute and wasn't activated until the third term, finishing with 19 disposals, with 13 of these coming in the third quarter alone. He has barely missed a game since 2005, playing in 147 out of a possible 154 games, averaging 91 points per match in that time.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Sam Gibson has fallen off the radar, managing a team-low 12 minutes last week against the Bulldogs.

PORT ADELAIDE

JARRAD REDDEN

Even though Aaron Sandilands didn't play last week, Redden showed enough to keep him on my radar. On form alone, he would have to go into Round 1 as the No.1 ruckman, despite the return of Brent Renouf against Fremantle. If you're someone that is going in with a rookie as your No.2, he would now have to be the front-runner for the starting berth, overtaking Jonathan Giles.

ROBBIE GRAY

Gray finally took a step forward last season, playing in all 22 games and averaging career-highs for both disposals and DT points. He started the year as a small forward, averaging 65 points per game between Rounds 1-11, but upon a move into the midfield in Round 13 he exploded, averaging 96 points per match for the remainder of the year. Gray has to be in the mix based on those numbers.

Freako Radar player - potential pick

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - I always knew that John McCarthy would be a hit at the Power. He racked up 64 DT points from only a half against the Dockers.

RICHMOND

BRETT DELEDIO

Like many of us, I was expecting Deledio to play at least a half last week against Geelong, but he missed out yet again. If he doesn't get named this week against the Giants, he could go into Round 1 without any games under his belt. I'm sure Richmond will seek approval for him to play at least one VFL game prior to Round 1, so hopefully he gets some match practice.

IVAN MARIC

Richmond identified Maric as the man to lead the ruck brigade and he could very well end up being one of the recruits of the year. He dominated last week against the Cats, albeit against Trent West and Orren Stephenson, finishing with 15 disposals, five marks and 22 hitouts. He won't post massive scores regularly this year, but what he will do is provide great value for your investment.

ST KILDA

TOM LEDGER

Ledger has impressed this pre-season and is in the mix to play against Port Adelaide in Round 1. He was the starting sub in both his games last season and he'll more than likely play a similar role this year when he plays, so be wary of this. He finished with 13 disposals and 34 DT points last week against West Coast from 63% game time.

AHMED SAAD

After missing the Essendon no-show match a few weeks ago with soreness and last week's trip to Perth, Saad returns to the side to face Collingwood this Friday. Scott Watters has declared he was "in contention to play in the season opener" which is great news for us. A good performance will hopefully see him debut against Port Adelaide in Round 1.

@FantasyFreako - There hasn't been a lot of love for Nick Riewoldt this pre-season. Are his fantasy days over?

SYDNEY SWANS

HARRY CUNNINGHAM

With Sydney placing Alex Brown on the long-term injury list, a position has opened for a rookie to get elevated. Considering that Cunningham was the only rookie listed player to feature last week against Essendon, he surely has to be first in line to get the nod. He didn't do much after coming on as the sub, finishing with only three disposals, but two of these resulted in goals.

LUKE PARKER

If you're after an alternative to a Chris Masten as a mid-priced mid-fielder, you could do a lot worse than picking Parker. This kid has been nothing short of impressive since debuting last season, attacking the contest with as much ferocity as team mate Jude Bolton, a player he has been earmarked to take over in the midfield. Parker finished with 21 disposals, two goals and 84 DT points last week against the Bombers.

@FantasyFreako - Stay away from Mitch Morton. He's shown nothing so far to even be considered for a starting squad.

WEST COAST EAGLES

BEAU WATERS

After playing eight games in 2008, Waters came out to play 21 in 2010 (missed all of 2009) averaging 87 DT points per match. Injuries hit yet again last year and he could only manage eight appearances, so will history repeat itself again? He played in all three finals last season and it was his game against Geelong that stood out, finishing with 38 disposals, 11 marks and game-high 140 points.

KOBY STEVENS

If Stevens plays a full game this week against Adelaide, then he'll be a certain starter come Round 1. After a strong pre-season, he is one player the Eagles expect to step up this year and considering his rookie price, he's close to a must have. Entering his third season, a breakout could be on the cards.

WESTERN BULLDOGS

CHRISTIAN HOWARD

Howard could be the bolter at the Bulldogs this season. The competition will be tough though for a place in defence, especially now that Ryan Hargrave looks to be back to full fitness, while the likes of Easton Wood, Robert Murphy and Lindsay Gilbee will all be fighting it out for spots. If Howard looks like getting early games, he could be prove to be a wise choice.

CLAY SMITH

Smith is every chance of making his debut against West Coast in Round 1, but avoid starting him on the ground as he's likely be given the green vest. In a team missing the likes of Matthew Boyd and Daniel Cross last week against the Kangaroos, he did his chances no harm, finishing with 22 disposals, six marks and 76 DT points.

FantasyFreako

@FantasyFreako - Tom Campbell came from nowhere last week to finish with three goals and 78 DT points. He's a rookie though so he won't be playing unless he's upgraded.
